|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----|
| There was an honest woodcutter who lived in a small village beside a forest. He worked hard daily to cut trees and sell wood in a city nearby to earn money. One hot day, the woodcutter was working beside a deep river. Suddenly, his axe slipped from his sweaty palms and fell into the river. |    |
| The woodcutter became worried. Without his axe, he could not make a living. He cried out loudly, "Can anyone help me find my axe?"                                                                                                                                                                 | 5  |
| Suddenly, someone tapped his shoulder. It was the wise man who lived in the forest! He wanted to see for himself how honest the woodcutter was. He brought out a beautiful axe made of pure silver and asked the woodcutter, "Is this yours?"                                                      | 10 |
| The woodcutter looked at it closely and shook his head vigorously. Next, the wise man brought out a sparkling gold axe. The woodcutter still shook his head and said, "That is not my axe."                                                                                                        |    |
| Finally, the wise man brought out a wooden axe, similar to the one the woodcutter had lost. The woodcutter shouted joyfully, "Yes, that is mine!"                                                                                                                                                  | 15 |
| Seeing how honest the woodcutter was, the wise man gave him all three axes as a reward. The woodcutter happily returned home. From that day, he only used the wooden axe. The other two were kept aside as a reminder that he should always be honest.                                             |    |
| Adapted from The Honest Woodcutter                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 |    |

| Ten-year-old Alex was the youngest boy in the neighbourhood. All the other children were much older than him and went to different schools. He longed for a friend who was his age so that they could play together.                                                                                                                                                                                                             |    |
| One day, a new family moved in next to Alex's home. Alex was delighted when he saw another ten-year-old boy named Jon. The two boys quickly became friends. They sat together in a nearby park and talked all day long. Once, Alex taught Jon how to fold paper aeroplanes. The very next day, Jon showed him how to fly them as far as possible. Soon, there were paper aeroplanes flying in and out of their windows non-stop! | 5  |
| A month later, Jon's family went on a vacation. Alex was sad because he would not be able to talk to Jon for a few weeks. Every day, he looked at Jon's window across the fence, counting down the days until he returned.                                                                                                                                                                                                       | 10 |
| One evening, Alex was looking at the empty house. He noticed an open door. Thinking that Jon had returned, he quickly ran over, excited to meet his best friend.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                 | 15 |
| However, he was shocked to see a man in a black mask in the living room. He was opening drawers and cupboards and putting the contents into a bag. It was a burglar! Alex silently went back to his house and quickly called for the police. In a flash, the police arrived and caught the burglar.                                                                                                                              |    |
| Hearing about that incident, Jon's family shortened their vacation and returned home the next day. Fortunately, nothing had been taken, thanks to Alex's quick actions. Jon patted Alex on the back and said, "Thank you for being a good friend."                                                                                                                                                                               | 20 |
