Section G: Comprehension Cloze (4 x 1 mark)

Read the following passage carefully. Fill in each blank with the most suitable word.

Listen carefully and you will hear different kinds of sounds. Our world (27) _____ full of sounds – dogs barking, birds chirping, bees humming. Animals use sounds for different reasons.

The rattlesnake makes a rattling sound to warn predators. The rattle on the tail of a rattlesnake is made up of scales. These scales are (28) _____ a stack of upside-down teacups. When the snake shakes its tail, the 'cups' rattle against each (29) _____, making the rattling sound.

Like the rattlesnake, most animals use sounds to send messages. A dog may bark to get your attention or tell you to (30) _____ your distance. A male frog makes loud croaking sounds to attract female frogs. Other than using sounds to send messages, some animals, such as dolphins and bats, use sound to help them "see" in the water or in the dark. The sounds they make bounce back and tell them what is ahead.

All these sounds are actually vibrations. Touch your throat and feel the vibrations from within when you talk today.

Section H: Comprehension [1] (10 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 31 to 40.

In 1940, four boys discovered some amazing caves. They told their teacher about them. When the teacher saw the paintings in the caves, now known as the Lascaux caves, he realised that his pupils had discovered prehistoric works of art.

Since then, scientists have studied these caves, trying to figure out the meanings behind the paintings. The early humans who made these paintings were hunters. However, these 5 paintings do not include all animals hunted by these early humans. For example, there are no paintings of reindeer although these early humans ate a lot of reindeer meat. There is also an interesting hunting scene showing the only human painted in the caves.

Scientists also found paintings consisting of squares and rectangles. These images are still a mystery. Experts think they may be linked to religious practices. 10

The early humans dwelled in tents, where they carried out day-to-day activities such as eating and sleeping. They only went to the dark, damp Lascaux caves to paint. They were creative because they made their paintings come alive by using bumps in stones as the eye of a horse.

The Lascaux caves are protected as a UNESCO World Heritage Site. They are currently 15 closed because the paintings have been slightly damaged by human activities. Scientists are trying to save these intriguing paintings. Copies of these valuable paintings have been created by some talented artists and can be bought at some museums.

Section I: Comprehension [2] (10 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 41 to 47.

Smiling, I watched the joyous celebration of the harvest festival with my pet canary cupped in my hands. "Boom!" Frightened by a firecracker going off, my pet canary flapped its wings furiously. I lost my grip on it.

I spotted it winging its way across the sky. Groaning, I jostled my way through the crowd. As soon as I got past the crowd, I began to give chase, determined to get it back. 5
Soon, it led me out of the city gates and into the harvest fields. I continued running after it until my legs ached in protest. Exhausted, I sat down and leaned against a large oak tree, accepting the fact that my pet canary was gone forever.

"Young girl, get up!" a skinny boy shouted at me from afar but I ignored him. His shouting continued until his voice began to turn hoarse. Finally, I stood up. He rushed over 10 and anxiously checked the area.

"Why are you so angry? It's just earth," I asked, puzzled.

Gripping his hand tightly around his flute, he turned around and looked angrily at me.
"This is where I sit every day!" he yelled.

I wanted to ease the tense situation. "Can you play the flute for me?" I asked with a 15 smile. He hesitated before he finally lifted the instrument to his lips, and the sweetest sound spilt forth from it. It was magical, something more than just sound.

"You are good!" I exclaimed when the tune ended. Blushing, he gave a smile. "You think so?" As we continued talking, our friendship blossomed. I enjoyed talking to him so much that I forgot all about my lost canary. 20
