Section C: Comprehension (10 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 13 to 17.

Cats are a group of carnivorous mammals that includes both large wild cats like lions and tigers, and small ones like the domestic cats that many people keep as pets. Cats have fur coats that can be long or short, and come in various colours and many striking patterns. Most breeds have a long tail, which is an extension of the spine. Cats often use their tails to steady themselves. 5

Cats have strong teeth and sharp claws that they can extend or retract as and when needed. Cats have excellent eyesight and triangular ears that are very sensitive to sound. In the wild, cats are predators and great hunters. They feed on birds, mice and even snakes. They are very agile and can move around quickly, hence easily catching their prey by surprise. 10

At home, cats are much more tame and gentle. Cats make excellent pets as they are easily domesticated. They are able to adjust quickly to small households because of their size and agility.

The earliest record of the domestication of the cat dated around 3 500 years ago in ancient Egypt, when cats were believed to be sacred. However, the actual domestication of cats came about when it was noticed that cats kept the Egyptian's grain houses free of mice and other rodents. In other cultures, cats have been associated with witches and the black cat has always been regarded as unlucky. 15 20

In reality, cats are playful companions for the people who keep them. Cats are very clean animals, bathing themselves frequently with their rough, pink tongues. They communicate by meowing, calling out and purring – a soft vibration of the vocal cords when the cat is happy or content. No one is really sure why cats purr. One theory is that cats purr to communicate with their kittens softly in the wild so that predators cannot hear them. 25

When kittens are born, they are completely helpless for the first few weeks. They are blind and deaf at first, and must rely on their mothers for protection and food. After a few weeks, the kittens grow and begin to play with each other. Playtime helps cats be more alert and nimble, which are skills required for successful hunting. This playfulness, along with a tendency to be very affectionate and loving, is what draws people to keep cats as house pets. 30

Fill in each blank with a suitable word.

In every period of history, there are different diseases and illnesses that plague people. Today, people _____ from illnesses like cancer, heart problems and diabetes. Illnesses that were fatal in the _____, like tuberculosis, are now preventable. Immunisations are given to children at birth to prevent them from getting these illnesses.

Medical technology is more sophisticated today _____ not in the past. Many diseases could not be cured then. The Black Death is an infamous period in history. During the 14th century, millions of people around the world succumbed to a disease that killed them within days. The disease _____ all the organs in a person's body. It spread quickly from one person to another and whole towns and cities were wiped out. The disease spread like wildfire.

Later, scientists realised that the disease _____ caused by a bacteria that was carried by fleas. These fleas resided in rodents, especially rats, and also in blankets and clothing. When rodents raided houses _____ search of food, they carried the disease with them. _____, many houses had thatched roofs and these were a haven for rats, thus causing the disease to be even more rampant.

Fleas were also attracted to people as many of them did not bathe and were unhygienic. They did not do so as they felt that bathing was dangerous.

Many people were ignorant during that time. However, just as fast as it started, the disease stopped suddenly. Till this day, no one _____
the reason for this, but some feel that it was due to a huge fire that killed all the infected fleas, rodents and people in the area.

Section H: Comprehension (10 marks)

Read the passage carefully and answer questions 36 to 40.

Alligator was not a very beautiful dog to look at and the light showed numerous old wounds where the hair would not grow. He was afraid of nothing on the face of the earth or under it. He hated all dogs and had a marked dislike to visitors, especially his owner, Mrs Potts', family. Hence, they seldom called. He hated snakes and has killed many but he would be bitten 5 someday and die. Any snake that came in his way ended up being killed.

It was near daylight. The room was very hot because of the fire. Alligator watched the wall from time to time. Suddenly, he became tense and alert. He drew himself a few inches nearer to the partition and a thrill ran through his body. The hair on the back of his neck began to bristle and the 10 battle-light burnt in his yellow eyes. Mrs Potts knew what this meant and she laid her hand on the club. An evil pair of small, bright, bead-like eyes glistened at one of these holes. The black snake came out slowly and moved its head up and down. Alligator lay still.

The snake came out a few inches more. Mrs Potts lifted her club and 15 the snake, as though suddenly aware of danger, stuck its head through the crack on the other side of the slab and hurried to get its tail round ^{it}him. Alligator sprang and his jaws came together with a snap. He missed as his nose was large and the snake's body was slithering between the slabs. He snapped again as the tail came round. He had the snake now in ^{his}its mouth and 20 tugged at it. "Thud, thud!" came Mrs Pott's club. The head rose to dart about but Alligator had his enemy close to its neck. "Thud, thud!" the snake's back was broken in several places. "Thud, thud!" its head was crushed.

Mrs Potts lifted the mangled reptile on the point of her stick and threw it into the fire and watched the snake burn. Alligator watched too. Mrs Potts 25 laid her hand on Alligator's head and all the fierce, angry light died out of his yellow eyes.
