In the modern city of Greendale, there lived a businessman, Mr Pip, and his three daughters. His two elder daughters were considerate and put others before themselves unlike the youngest daughter.

One day, the businessman received news that his business had failed. Overnight, the businessman and his daughters had to move from a mansion to a one-room flat.

5

The businessman decided to start his business all over again. He tried to go to a neighbouring country to look for another job. Before he set off, he promised to bring back presents for all his three daughters. The elder two said that they did not need anything. In contrast, the youngest daughter demanded that her father bring back an ugly but rich man.

The businessman did well enough to save enough money. Within a year, the businessman had made enough profits for him to return to Singapore with presents for his daughters. He invited his friend, Mr Gray, who was ugly but had a heart of gold, to travel with him to Greendale.

10

At Greendale Airport, the businessman had a warm homecoming. His two elder daughters were pleased to have him back. His youngest daughter took one look at the ugly man, strode over to him and kissed him on the lips. Immediately, he turned into a dashing and handsome young man.

15

"Are women here all so bold?" he asked, taken aback at her behaviour.

"No, not all, she replied. "I'm glad I still remember my fairy tales. I knew a kiss would do the trick. Come, let's get married now."

20

"Sorry, young lady," the man replied. "I don't believe in fairy tales. I am very clear-headed and I do not want to marry someone like you."

With a wave, he headed home.

(10 marks)

Once upon a time, there were twin boys called Hunah and Balan. They lived in a house in the mountains, surrounded by rainforest trees.

The twins had two sisters. The sisters hated the twins. They would make the twins sleep outside in thorny bushes. They would eat all the food their grandmother cooked so that the twins were forced to hunt and depend on nature to survive.

5

Right from their birth, the twins were blessed with magic powers. One day, they decided to use their magic to teach their cruel sisters a lesson. That day, they went out hunting as usual, but came home hungry and empty-handed.

"Big sisters, please help us," they cried. "We've found a tree with a lot of birds in it. We can't catch them all ourselves."

Now, the big sisters were greedy as well as cruel. They were sharp enough to realize immediately that the birds would make a sumptuous feast! They hastened into the forest and the twins showed them the tree that was full of birds.

The twins pretended to shoot at some of the birds with their blowpipes. "Big sisters! You are taller than us," they said. "Please climb up the branches and bring the birds down!"

Anticipating a wonderful feast, the sisters climbed up the tree with ease. However, as they climbed, the tree grew bigger and bigger until it towered high above even the tallest forest trees. The sisters were terrified that they might fall. The twins laughed, "If you're really scared, untie your scarves and use them to hold on to the tree."

The sisters did as they were told. The long scarves looked like tails. The sisters looked like monkeys as they slipped and swayed among the branches, shouting with rage and fear. In fact, they did not just look like monkeys — they had turned into them!
