It was a harsh winter. The evening air was chilly and windy as Myami, her mother, the other women and children made their way home. It had been a long day working in the fields. Suddenly, there was a movement in the bushes and out hopped a snow white rabbit. It limped towards Myami and her mother and collapsed at their feet.

5

Being a compassionate girl, Myami moved forward to carry the rabbit home. Her neighbour, Taka, saw the rabbit and wanted it for his dinner. Myami immediately grabbed the rabbit and ran home. Once they were home, she dressed its wounds and fed it some dinner. Myami and her mother then went to bed as the next day was another long working day.

10

The next morning, breakfast was already on the table when Myami and her mother woke up. They each thought that the other had prepared the meal. They ate their breakfast quickly and got ready to leave. Before they left, Myami checked on the rabbit which she named Usagi. Usagi was cleaning its wounds.

That evening, when Myami and her mother returned home, a hot dinner was waiting for them. Myami and her mother were puzzled but they were hungry and exhausted. After dinner, Myami checked on Usagi again and it was up and hopping. Myami let Usagi run free in the house before she went to bed.

15

The meals continued appearing for Myami and her mother to enjoy. Taka who lived next to them could smell the aromatic wafts of the meals. He was curious and crept over one early morning to take a look. To his shock, he saw Usagi preparing breakfast! He gave a shout and it frightened Usagi. Read the passage carefully and answer questions 39 to 46.

(10 marks)

My wife and I were in Bombay when we received some very bad news – my wife's sister had suddenly passed away. The next day, we headed for Goa to make our way home.

At the railway station, we learnt that the next train to Goa had no reserved seats left. I still bought two general compartment tickets, knowing full well that the ten-hour overnight trip in an overcrowded coach would not be an easy one for us as I was seventy-two and my wife, sixty-three. I approached the stationmaster, hoping for some help but to no avail.

5

"Why is she looking so upset?" asked a man in his late forties, pointing at my wife.

10

Thakur, an extremely friendly timber merchant, listened as I explained my predicament to him. He assured me that he would help after he had sent his daughter off. She was heading to Lucknow. Standing nearby were his son and daughter. Thakur called out to his son to run home to fetch some tea.

Soon, we were chatting like old friends with Thakur and his daughter. We even exchanged telephone numbers. Thakur's son returned with some glasses and a thermos flask of ginger tea. Thakur sent his daughter off and promised to return soon.

15

Once again, we were left alone until Thakur returned with dinner for us. Dinner was wrapped in foil. We were anxious but Thakur told us to stay calm. At 8 pm, our train pulled into the station. He made enquiries with the stationmaster and a few porters.

20

One of the porters took us to a sleepover compartment. Just then, Thakur called out to me as he spoke to another porter from an air-conditioned-compartment. Then, Thakur quickly helped us with our luggage and guided us to our seats. He also gave us water. We thanked him and bade him farewell as the train pulled away.

25

Five years on, we are still in contact with Thakur.
