Sustenance
for All

Make a difference!

Let's do our part to reduce food wastage and wipe out hunger!

Do you know?

National Environment Agency (NEA) recently reported that the amount of food wastage in Singapore hit a record high of 796,000 tonnes which is about 140 kg of food per person per year. That is equivalent to Singaporeans throwing two bowls of rice away every single day on average. While many throw away food without batting an eyelid, there are others who cannot even afford a decent meal.

What we do

Sustenance for All is an organisation dedicated to fighting hunger and reducing food wastage in Singapore. We work with residents' committees and family service centres to reach out to the needy and supply essential food items and rations to them on a regular basis. We have also set up Self Collection Centres all across Singapore, providing immediate assistance to people.

Since 2015, we have stepped up efforts to provide food items of higher nutritional value. In addition to eggs, we have embarked on the distributing of fruits in 2016 to encourage healthy eating. This is only possible because of thoughtful contributions from people like you.

How can you help?

You can bring a smile to those in need by either sponsoring food baskets through cash contributions or donating food supplies.

Sponsoring Food Baskets

We believe that a better life starts with eating better. Besides just filling tummies, we want our beneficiaries to have healthier food so that they can perform better at work, at school and in turn create better lives for themselves. Help us to fulfil our goal by contributing cash to support our food baskets initiative today! Click here to sponsor your baskets now.

Donating Food Supplies

In addition to supporting our food baskets initiative, why not reduce food wastage in your own homes by donating food items you no longer need? Are there food items lying in your kitchen cabinet that you no longer fancy? Please donate them to us as there are many people who would love to have that packet of chips or canned food that is not to your liking.

You may drop off your food supplies with our volunteers at our four Food Collection Points located at:

Section I: Comprehension (Open-ended) (20 marks)

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80.

High on the boat, our musician sang of a safe, successful voyage with many pearls found. A line of men tugged on ropes that snaked from the ship into the sea. Saibs have the job of pulling divers from the bottom of the sea. I stood beside the thick ropes that circled the deck. What if I'm bitten by a shark? What if I don't come up for air in time? Nasser, one of the divers, emerged from the sea with a basket gripped in his hand. He climbed over the railing of the ship and gripped it as his saib emptied his basket full of shells onto the deck.

"Get me some tea, Omer," Nasser said to me as he took big gulps of air. I knew he was teasing. He'd been my father's good friend.

"Of course I will get your tea," I said. "But you know I'm no longer an errand boy. I'm a diver, like my father was."

10

Father was lean and brown with strong shoulders and a powerful chest. He could hold his breath for more than two minutes underwater!

"Your father was bald and deaf, like the rest of us," Nasser laughed.

The salty Arabian Gulf produced the finest pearls in the world, but the salty water made divers lose their hair. The pressure also fast destroyed their hearing. I had shaved my head, so I did not have to worry about losing any hair.

"I've dived the shallow seas before," I said. "I can hold my breath for a whole minute."

"The sea here is deep." Nasser cautiously climbed over the ship's railing for his next dive. "Pull your rope before you feel breathless." He then plugged his nose and disappeared into the water.

20

The moist air stretched my lungs as I breathed repeatedly. Time to dive. I slung an empty basket around my neck and tied a heavy stone to my foot with a rope. I took one more deep breath, plugged my nose — and jumped. The stone shot through the water like a spear and the salt stung my skin and eyes. I felt the water crushing my head. I crossed my arms and straightened my back. I felt myself gliding through the water. The stone then hit the seabed with a thump. I freed my foot from the rope and blinked. My life flashed before my eyes and a drum pounded in my head. It throbbed with pain. Waves of light shimmered at the surface above, but here, far below, the world was foggy blue. Fish played hide-and-seek among the plants that danced along a rocky ridge. Light glittered in the murky depths. Leather gloves protected my fingers from the rough coral. I scratched at the rocky ridge, and three oysters dropped into my hands. I was shocked at how easy the job was. Did they contain any pearls? The sea swirled as Nasser dug in the oyster bed nearby. I scooped sand, rocks and plants into my basket, hoping for shells in the mix. Suddenly, I felt breathless.

25

I held the basket's rim tightly and tugged the rope. I jolted forward and up. I knew that, far above, the saib's strong arms strained to pull me toward the surface, into the air and the blazing Arabian sun. Don't breathe yet. Just when I thought my lungs would burst, my ears popped and there was light. I reached for the ship, yanked the plug from my nose and took deep breaths. I watched as the saib emptied the contents of my basket onto the deck. Moist air filled my lungs.

35

Nasser burst through the water. He removed his nose plug and grinned at me. "Not bad for an errand boy." I wrapped the empty basket around my neck and inserted my foot into the loop of the rope. The sun roasted the salty wetness into powder on my skin. Light glittered on the pile of shells heaped on the ship's deck. I raised my chin and said, "I'm a pearl diver."
