Leonardo da Vinci was a painter, architect, inventor, and student of all things scientific. His natural genius crossed so many disciplines that he epitomised the term "Renaissance man." Today, he is best known for his art. Two of his paintings, Mona Lisa and The Last Supper, remain among the world's most famous and enduring works of all time. Art, Leonardo believed, was indisputably connected with science and nature. Drawn in 1490, art and science intersected perfectly in Leonardo's sketch of "Vitruvian Man".

Largely self-educated, he filled dozens of secret notebooks with inventions, observations and theories about his pursuits from aeronautics to anatomy. However, the ideas he expressed in his notebooks were often difficult to interpret. As a result, though he was lauded in his time as a great artist, his peers often did not fully appreciate his genius.

CELL was established by Singapore Parks Board and Science Nature Research Centre. For more information about CELL activities and booking of programmes, please email CELL at arandapark@cell.sg.

Testimonial by eight-year-old Kara:

My family and I enjoyed ourselves at the Aranda Nature Park as there are many things to see and do there. You can hike, ride a bike, visit the Charles Education Centre or take the Treetop Walk. I love the Treetop Walk most. From the top of the bridge, we saw beautiful butterflies, trees and flowers. I could not believe it when a long-tailed macaque came so close to us. It was scary and yet fascinating. I took a picture of it using my dad's handphone. I hope to visit the park again soon!

Read this passage and answer questions 71 to 80. (20m)

It was a cool, breezy morning. My friends and I were starting our hike along the trail with anticipation. I had looked forward to getting up close and personal with some wildlife. Tom, my buddy, had warned me about possibly encountering bears during the hike. He told me not to go near any bears, especially those with cubs. On the contrary, I thought it would be exciting to see the adorable creatures! He even gave me a pamphlet to read up on the things to take note of during a hike. I stuffed the pamphlet deep into my backpack without reading it.

5

We went on our hike in single file with myself being the last of the four along the path. It was only one hour into our hike and I was starting to regret the trip. I had forgotten to bring along my water bottle. I was thinking of getting water from Tom but I knew he was going to nag at me. I dismissed the thought and pressed on with the hike.

10

I was about to ask Tom how long it would take for the trail to end when I heard the snapping of a twig. I faltered, then froze on the spot. I squinted my eyes and tried to look through the thick foliage at the sides of the trail to find out what had caused the sound. There was nothing. Concerned, I shouted out to my hiking buddies in front. It was then that I realised that there was no one in front of me! They had gone on ahead. Exasperated with myself for being overly suspicious, I quickened my steps to try to catch up. It would be worse if I was left behind. The map was with my hiking buddies. I would get lost if I followed the wrong trail.

15

What I saw next stopped me in my tracks. It was a grizzly bear cub. It crossed the trail right in front of me. Then, a huge mother bear appeared from behind it. I was so lucky to encounter bears! I could not believe it! I definitely did not want to scare them away. Taking a step closer, I raised my phone up to try to take a picture of the bears.

20

However, before I could do that, the mother bear stared at me and growled. I then heard thudding from behind me. I slowly turned. I came face to face with the snout of another bear cub. I could feel its breath in my face. Taken by surprise, I turned and ran, only to find myself running towards the mother bear. I knew I should have just stood still but it was too late to regret my bad decision.

25

Everything was a blur from that moment on. The mother bear started charging at me. I fell. Sprawled on the ground, I closed my eyes. There was no doubt in my mind that it was going to be my end. The mother bear was coming towards me faster than I was able to get up and retreat. Miraculously, the mother bear swerved at the last second. I could feel the light brush of the wind as she went past me.

30

After I was certain the danger was over, tears started flowing down my cheeks uncontrollably. I turned to see the mother bear and its cub joining the other cub at the other side of the trail. I still could not believe I could have lost my life but had somehow managed to get out of the situation alive.

I did not know how long I had stayed sprawled on the ground sobbing, looking like a mess. When my hiking buddies ran towards me with words of concern, I could not reply. It took me a while before I could calm down and recount my dangerous encounter. We continued on our hike and completed our trail. I must have replayed that harrowing experience a thousand times in my head that day. "If only I had not taken Tom's warning so lightly, I would not have gone through such a dangerous encounter," I scolded myself. I had definitely learnt my lesson.
