Recent reports have stated that Singaporeans will experience warmer days ahead. The daily highest temperature is forecast to exceed 34 degrees Celsius on more days in the future, said the Meteorological Service Singapore.

Singapore's annual temperature has been steadily increasing over the past (17)
25 years. Therefore, it is predicted that with global warming, there is a greater prospect of more extreme heat. Experts have warned that Singapore will face more extreme weather conditions due to climate change. This includes higher temperatures, prolonged dry spells and more intense rainfall.
(18)
(19)

In February this year, the weather was drier and warmer than normal because of stronger solar heating of land areas and less cloudiness.
(20)
February is usually the driest month of the year, while the warmest months are April, May and June.

National Children's Garden

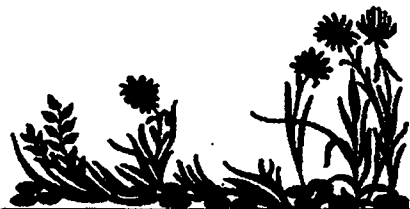

Official Opening on 31st May 2019

The National Children's Garden is the first-of-its-kind in Singapore. It provides a lot of fun for children. They will learn to care for nature and the environment through participation in exciting games and innovative activities.

Message from the Director of National Children's Garden

Welcome to the first garden in Singapore designed specially for children of all ages. Adults are welcome too as there are many opportunities for family bonding. The facilities are planned with advice from world famous nature and environmental experts. The activities are created by award-winning Science teachers. Visit us if you are keen to discover more about nature conservation and the environment. A series of special events have been planned for the coming school holiday in June to celebrate our grand opening so do come by to join us!

Dr Suresh Raj
Director, National Children's Garden

June School Holiday Events

Join us to have an enjoyable time learning about the wonders of nature! There will be different activities planned for each week of the holiday. All activities are open to the public.

Sandalwood is a popular plant with traditional uses such as for skin care and perfumes. This plant has been much overharvested _ (29) _ of its high demand. Similarly, the rosy periwinkle, _ (30) _ is native to the island of Madagascar is also facing the same fate. These are two examples of species of flora in danger of disappearing _ (31) _ the earth forever.

Human beings have been using plants _ (32) _ medicine for as long as we have existed. Nowadays, more people are choosing to do this. The increased use of medicinal plants has unfortunately led to heavy pressure _ (33) _ these indigenous plants when they are collected from the wild. In some cases, the overharvesting of these particular herbs _ (34) _ even led to their endangerment. Awareness of _ (35) _ problem is very important in order to prevent their extinction.

We can help endangered medicinal plants by purchasing them _ (36) _ from companies that do not obtain them from the wild. _ (37) _ herb companies grow such plants on farms to avoid overharvesting them.

We can _ (38) _ learn to grow many medicinal plants ourselves. Perhaps in this way, it will also help to take the pressure off their populations in the wild.

Conservation efforts in New Zealand to save the flightless kiwi bird have paid off. Two of its species are no longer at a high risk in extinction. These two (40)

(39)

are the Northern Brown and the Rowi. The internasionale Red List of Threatened

(41)

Species has changed the status of these birds. For being "endangered", they are upgraded to "vulnareble" due to a steady increase in their population. This marks

(42)

(43)

more than 25 years of sucesfull efforts by not only the New Zealand government

(44)

but also comiunity groups.

(45)

The main threats to the two species come from habitat lose and predators like dogs and wild cats which killed the chicks in the nest. The Rowi population, at (47)

(46)

160 in 1995, was original categorised as "endangered" but now the number has sicnifikently grown to 450 adults today. Meanwhile, Northern Brown populations have staibelised after decades of decline. Experts expect them to start increase soon if conservation efforts continue. The scientists are hopeful for this outcome.

(48)

(49)

Twenty-six years ago, Yossi went deep into the Amazon jungle and got lost for three weeks. As a result, he lost a lot of weight as hunger, infection and disease took a toll on him. However, he miraculously survived the ordeal and wrote a book about his traumatic encounter years later. The question remains - how did he survive?

Yossi had always dreamt of exploring the vast uninhabited heart of the Amazon jungle. He met and became good friends with Marcus who happened to share the same dream. As they travelled together, they met Karl who impressed them with tales of his adventures swimming in the different rivers of the world. Karl also decided to tag along. Lastly, the trio was joined by a nature photographer, Kevin. The adventurous foursome then set off on their quest together.

Their plan was to sail on a raft down the Tuichi River which Karl had described as a calm water body with soft sandy riverbanks. Initially, that seemed like a good idea so they built the raft excitedly and started downriver. However, on their journey, Karl suddenly began telling them about the dangers ahead - the sharp rocky riverbanks, sudden strong currents and waterfalls, all not suitable for boating! He then refused to continue on the journey, confessing his inability to swim. The group was shocked by his lies, resulting in a huge argument. The men then split up and moved on in pairs.

Yossi and Kevin continued on the raft and focused on being able to steer it - until Karl's words became their worst nightmare. Approaching a waterfall, they lost control of their raft and were thrown apart. Kevin made it to the shore but Yossi was thrown overboard, floating away downstream. Yossi then spent four days trying to get back upriver to find his friend but to no avail. During this time, Kevin was rescued by some fishermen. He quickly went to the town and sought help from the local authorities. To his horror, he discovered that Karl was a criminal on the run. Kevin's heart sank upon hearing it.

Deep in the forest, Yossi scrambled around, lost and alone, without supplies or equipment in an unknown territory. He barely escaped beasts of prey and almost drowned in a flash flood. As the days passed, not only did Yossi run out of food, but he also realised his foot was starting to rot away from fungal infection. That was far worse than when giant red ants had walked all over and bit his body. He hunted for food but it was insufficient. Eventually, he realised that the wild monkeys would be an excellent source of protein but he could not stomach the thought of devouring them.

Yossi wanted to throw in the towel many times but believed he would be rescued one day. That day, as he was cleaning a fresh wound on his foot, Yossi heard the sound of an engine. Trying to find the source of the noise, he struggled to the riverbank. His pulse raced as he caught sight of Kevin. He was in a canoe with some forest rangers who had arranged this search and rescue mission.

Yossi wanted to shout out but was too exhausted to do so. He panicked when he saw the party turning around and away from him. Summoning the little strength he had, Yossi lunged forward and fell into the water with a resounding splash. That caught Kevin's attention and Yossi was finally rescued.

It took Yossi three months to recover from his injuries and trauma. He learnt that Karl and Marcus had disappeared into the forest. He could not believe that what had started as an exciting adventure had become a horror story for them. Knowing the terror of being lost in the jungle, Yossi strived to find them but days turned into weeks and weeks into months. Death was a certainty. True enough, they were never found or heard of again.
