The long-awaited day finally came. Ben made his way to the boat waiting at the harbour to take him to a faraway island where he hoped to seek a job. A member of the crew beckoned to him to board the vessel. Soon the boat was out in the open sea. The weather was perfect and the sea was calm and peaceful. Unfortunately, by evening, dark clouds began to gather in the sky, warning him that a storm was imminent. Ben was worried that he could not make it to the island. He did not want to return to his village without securing a job and become a laughing stock. Just when Ben thought things could not get any worse, seven burly men clambered aboard. Ben sensed danger so he jumped into the sea without a second thought.

Caught red-handed

Burglars stole a priceless eighteenth century diamond-studded crown from a museum in London last week. Detectives rushed to the scene to investigate the crime. However, the crafty burglars were clever to avoid all the closed-circuit cameras and security guards. Even their getaway vehicle was never found. Fortunately, they left behind one important clue: a single perfect fingerprint.

Our fingerprints are very special

You might have the same eye colour as someone else, the same shaped nose and, if you are an identical twin, you might even have a face that looks the same but not a single person on earth has the same fingerprints as you.

Fingerprints are the patterns on the pads of your fingers made by tiny ridges in the outer layer of your skin. These ridges help you get a better grip on smooth objects. This is particularly important if you are climbing trees and swinging between branches.

Fingerprints don't lie

Most importantly, fingerprints help solve criminals. For more than a hundred years, police have used fingerprints to identify people. Every time you touch something, you leave sweat and oil prints which are the same pattern as your fingerprints. Criminals often leave very clear fingerprints behind because the stress of carrying out a crime causes them to sweat more than usual. While these fingerprints are normally invisible, police can make them visible by dusting them with some fine powder or spraying them with fine chemicals. Once a fingerprint is developed, it can be compared with the images on police files.

What do you want to be when you grow up?

If your response is 'a police officer', we have the camp just for you!

Kid Detective Camp for children aged 10 to 12 is back by popular demand! From 1 to 5 June 2019, we guarantee that you shall have loads of fun at Violet Country Club where you will unleash your creativity and develop your potential to the fullest!

I would never forget that eventful morning. I just knew that I had to hide from Mum so I crouched behind the chicken coop on our farm. Just as I had thought, Mum started looking for me shortly after breakfast. "Aki! Aki!" I could hear her calling.

How I dreaded that moment. Budi, my cousin, had told me all about it. How they made sure you could not run away. How they embarrassed you by staring at you and making you stand for a long time. Worst of all, how the blinding light suddenly appeared from nowhere. "The light sucks your soul away," warned Budi. "No one is ever the same after that. I've seen the people who walked groggily out of the room." 5

As I remained squatting behind the chicken coop, I saw a familiar pair of eyes staring curiously at me. It was Jewel, my dog. He sniffed at me. "Go away, Jewel!" I hissed. However, my strange action only made Jewel feel confused. Then, he started barking. "No, Jewel ..." I said in desperation. Seconds later, I could see my mother bending over and staring at me. 10

"Aki, I know that the chicks are adorable but you don't have to play with them now!" she chided. "You know your dad is fuming. He does not like to wait. HURRY! You've to change!"

"No Mum, don't make me go. Please!" I said, pleading with her as she dragged me out from behind the chicken coop. 15

"What's wrong with you? Are you sick?" Mum probed. "Look, your hair is such a mess. I've to comb it again."

Reluctantly, I entered the house with Mum, trying desperately to think of a way to get out of the dire situation. "Mum," I said suddenly. "I just remembered. I'm supposed to help Uncle Juro on his farm. I've promised him that I'll be there. Maybe I can go with you some other time?" I gushed quickly. 20

"Aki," Mum said, an edge of warning in her voice. I could tell she was aware that I was lying. "I just don't understand why you're behaving like this," Mum continued. If she only knew, she would merely laugh at my foolishness. 25

Eventually, we were ready. I had to resign to my fate. Disheartened, I walked with Mum and Dad to the bus stop. Shortly, we arrived at the city. Mum walked briskly and excitedly. Dad, as usual, wore a straight face. Nonetheless, I could tell that he was eager as he was wearing his smartest suit. I tried to put on a brave front when we arrived at our destination but I could stand it no longer and wailed uncontrollably. 30

"What is wrong, my dear?" Mum said, putting her arms around me. An old man popped his head out from behind a strange-looking machine, knitting his brows. He peered at me through his thick glasses. Dad looked a little embarrassed. "It's my husband's birthday today," Mum hurriedly explained. "We wanted it to be special. We've never taken a photo before."

"Many children are like this," the man said. "They're very shy to get their photo taken. Don't worry, Madam. I can empathise fully." 35
